

Kei-Sho Chronicle – June 2022

Hello everyone! June has come and gone. June was a quiet month at Kei-Sho, especially compared with the excitement of April and May. But there were some interesting events, like the Hydrangea Festival at Hakusan Shrine, and the open classroom, where parents could come and watch their student's classes.

The first big event in June was the Hydrangea Festival at Hakusan Shrine. This year, Hakusan shrine held a festival so that visitors could see the blooming hydrangeas at the shrine. Due to Covid-19, this festival has not been held, but this year it was held, with some restrictions.

While the flowers were beautiful, Kei-Sho also participated in the festival. Our Kei-Sho dance team performed at the festival on Saturday, 11. This was a great opportunity for the new first year students to show off what they have learned.

The students had to perform with masks on due to Covid-19, but they did their best and put on an excellent performance.

Open Classroom:

Kei-Sho also held an open class for the parents of students. On Saturday, June 18th, parents could come to Kei-Sho and see their children in class. Each homeroom teacher held a lesson for their class.

Most teachers taught their own subject, like science, maths, or business, but some classes had special lessons. The students of 3B presented the results of their group research projects, and in 2A and 2B, students presented their research from May's study trip to Odaiba.

Parents were able to see how classes are run at Kei-Sho. It was also interesting for me to see how classes are run for different subjects.

On the topic of watching lessons, Kei-Sho also had 2 student teachers in June. These teachers were doing their practice teaching for university. It was interesting to see how these future-teachers ran their lessons.

Science: Students are testing their ability to see.

Research: Students are discussing the stock market

June was a quiet month. While there were some events, it was a time for students to focus on studying. Especially with end of term exams at the start of July. - Llew
