

Kei-Sho Chronicle – January 2023

This Issue:
New Year at
Kei-Sho

Hello everyone, over the winter holidays, the date changed and a new year began. Even with the beginning of the year 2023, many things have not changed. Kei-Sho is still open, students are still attending school, and I am still writing Kei-Sho Chronicles. January is a quiet month, with the only events being the opening ceremony and some entrance exams. Although the entrance exams will be held in full in February.

New Year at Kei-Sho:

With the date changing over to 2023, a new year has begun at Kei-Sho. To begin the new year, Kei-Sho held an opening ceremony on January 10th. This ceremony welcomed students back to school and was also an opportunity for some students to receive awards.

The third-year students were among those who came back to school, although only for a week. On January 16th, the third-year students had their last classes at Kei-Sho. While many of the third-year students have already been accepted into universities and specialty schools through recommendations, those who are aiming for general admissions have now started their final preparations.

The first stage of entrance exams for next year have also started in January, with students with recommendations undertaking their tests on January 22nd and 23rd. This is only the first set of tests with the general tests taking place in February.

With the winter holidays over and school resuming for the third term, students at Kei-Sho only have a longer before this school year is over.

Good Luck Everyone!

- Llew

